

Data analysis Nanodegree

Who is the goodest boi?

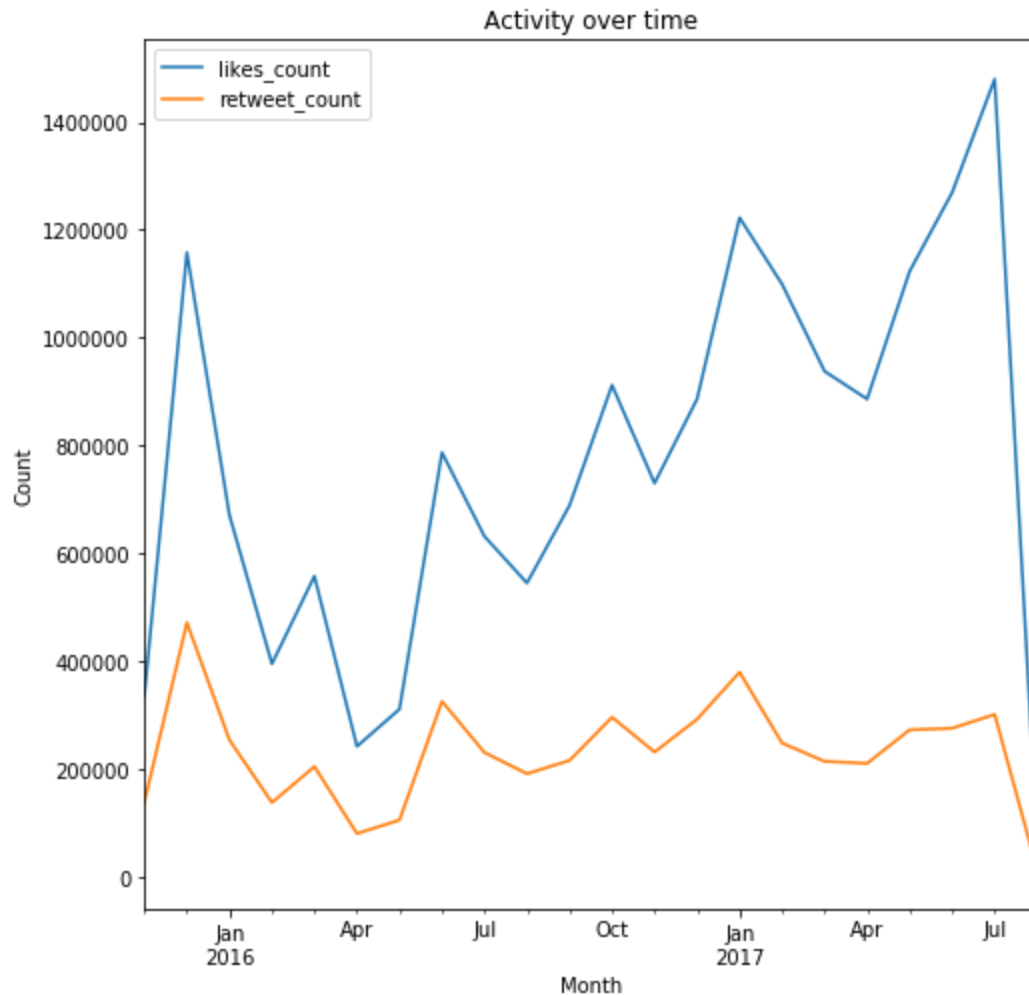

A look into how WeRateDogs tweets.

by Faress Eissa on January 20

Who doesn't know WeRateDogs? It's our favorite Twitter account for rating doggos all over the world.

It started on november 2015 rating dogs with the most “spot on” rate and giving theme cute reviews,and it hasnt stopped since !

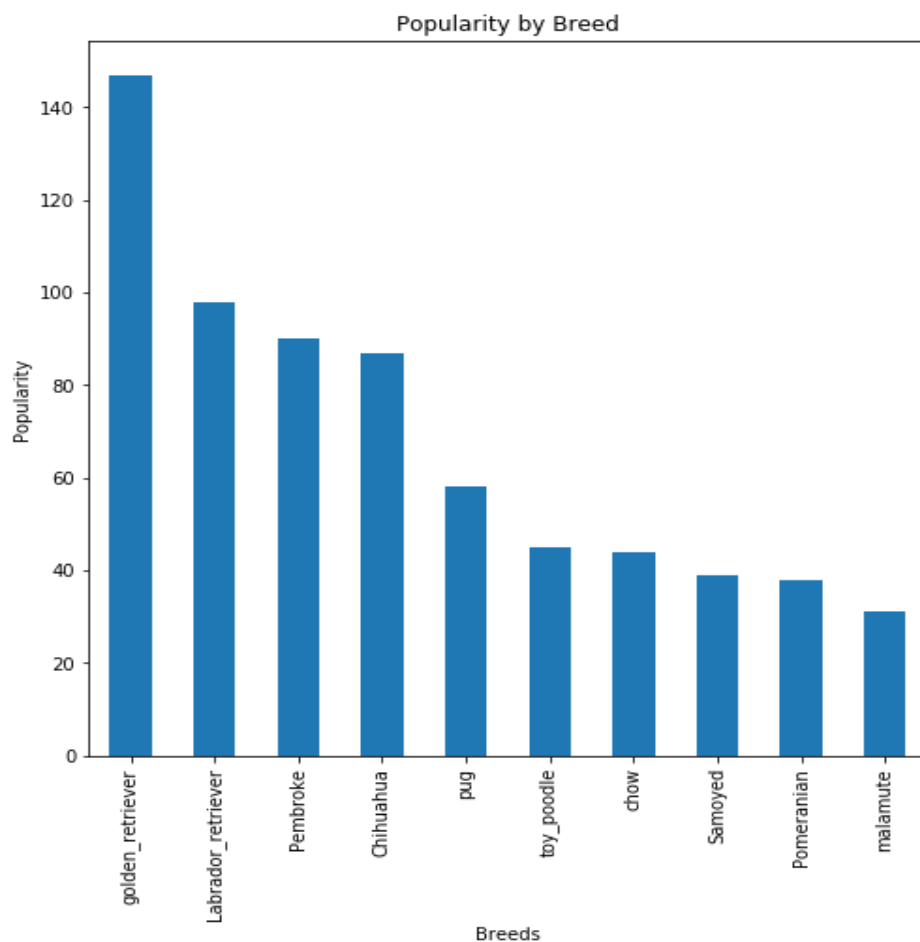

In fact, activity and popularity increased over time as we can see here, likes and retweets counts for WeRateDogs tweets trend is increasing since they started.

But the real question here is about the dogs, of course. And our question is: who is the goodest boi? And is it even a boi or a gurl?

To answer these questions, I made a little data analysis project where I wrangled and analyzed WeRateDogs tweet archive and came up with some very interesting answers.

It turns out that the goodest is a boi indeed. In my dataset I found out that the number of male dogs is more than the number of female dogs by a factor of 2.4! Which means people love owning male dogs as pets.

As the tweet archive I collected didn't have this information, I had to do it myself using the wonders of data analysis by predicting the dogs genders using only their names.

Still who is the goodest boi? We look in this graph at the most popular dog breeds. A clear winner is the Golden Retriever with his cousin the Lab as a runner up. They are rated and reviewed more than any other breed we can find.

So, the Golden Retriever is the most popular, but how is it rated?

It turns out it's not the highest rated dog breed with an average rating of 11.5 out of 10 (so wow!).

In fact, the highest ever rated dog breed on average is the Pomeranian because they are so smol and fluffy.

We hope that WeRateDogs continue to present doggos and puppies and never stop giving them awesome ratings.

.....